President Harding has evidently made a mistake in the selection of his secretary of commerce if not two mistakes by putting Davis at the head of the labor department of the government. Hoover is detested by country republicans as heartily as by democrats, especially among ruralites, and that he will play in to Britains hand at every opportunity, few doubt. Davis is an original Australian, hence imbued if not infused with English ideas and labor will have another guest coming after he has "cleaned" house as he proposes to do without delay. Another appointee more pronounced foreign as to name, Phillip Giordano in prospective for the important post of immigration commissioner and some such a name as Jacques Degouette or Monsieur L'Ouvre appended to customs office general, would make the list of head officials fairly well filled with representatives of 'allied' nations. Why a sufficient number of Smiths, Jones, Browns or some others with American cognomen and free from innoctuation with foreign sentiments cannot be found to fill offices with does not appear altogether transparent.
